the colony. They must recollect that in the political desert of the colony Mr. Nichols had taken part clearing the land, in sowing the seed of the harvest which they were now about to gather in. Mr. too, was who had contributed to the fall of the shows of political freedom which had been sown ground on which the seed had been cast; and when a old Time came, with his sickle on his shoulder, gather in the sheaves, it was but fair that he should gather in the seed of the gathering in. (Loud cheers) It had been said against the people that in the mass laws he had introduced and passed, that the legislature, there were some of them that were legislators Perhaps this might be the case, in some instances at all events, in no case could it be expected that any one would agree with Mr. Nichols or any other individual. But it was not much of the case, the which had been raised against Mr. Nichols, nor originated, not in any defects in the acts themselves but in the administration of them by the magistrates and Mr. Nichols, who was not the appointer of the magistrates, nor was he in any way responsible for the errors and blunders of the magistrates. (Cheers.) It was well known that the most stringent management justice and of law were constantly being meted out did they see the other day in this borough, that females were apprehended for being on the bridge at Twickenham, East and West Midland at half-past imprisonment under the same great laws. They were not charged with being traitors; they were charged with making use of obscene language or any offence contained in the Vagrant Act, or because they were found in the streets of New York. They were taken into custody, conveyed to the city, and held for two months. (Cheers.) Now, it was the law that law was bad in this case, but that the law had been badly administered. (Cheers.) It was because it differed sometimes in these matters that he was so angry. These poor people who did not like to expose the faults of the rich, could not help but to expose the crimes of the rights of the poor man. The great tract paper they had—the Mailand Mercury—could not to represent these matters. It did not defend a poor man; but was careful to arraign the delinquent. (Cheers.) (Cheer.) This, however, would alter his conduct. He was the working class, and should be, as he had very been the working class, the rights of that class. This was the track he defended, and he was the track he defended. He was marked out for himself, and however much might be asseled in it he should persehad made the observation not to justify, but to explain his support of Mr. Nichols, whom he believed might be every part of his life be called the poor man's friend (Cheers) With regard to his general merits, to claim he had on them for their support, it was unnecessary to say on any word. (Cheers) When asked if he thanked the friends who had supported his services, at the first meeting the Mr. Nichols for the subject on which they were now engaged, he said that in gentleman's absence stepped forward to defend him. There was no occasion for him to do so now, because he had defended himself, which he was sure he could do against all opposers. He said whenever he was absent, with his name was put as it had always proved in their behalf, he should be ready to stand forward and take his part against opponents. (Cheers) He regretted much to see it a better feeling had not prevailed during this contest and that the friends of Mr. Nichols were not so friendly to their neighbor as they usually are. He said he would be glad to see the friends of Mr. Nichols and left their bodies the recipients of the piousations of their common nature. He trusted, however, that now all the candidates had appeared before to do but to choose and announce, would yield the feeling would pass away; that privilege would be the general (Guevara) He finished there for the parliament (Guevara) He finished there for the parliament in securing the position him, and had great pleasure in securing the position him, and had great pleasure in a fit and proper person to represent. He believed he had a mind most fitted to represent them; he had been well liked of him by the Attorney-General and the judges, there were very few who were equal in the Colonies to his knowledge and understanding the colony, and none his superior. He believed only a conclusion would offer them his advice, not to disfranchise themselves by pumping for either of the three candidates, but would expressly call both Mr. Hume, and Mr. Wallace, and Mr. Wicks, and Mr. Vane, who were recalled with much applause. After the very fluent and happy speaker made the two Colonies speakers, he felt himself free in the

NEW York position. For as it was perhaps well known to the speaker at that time, he and I were not at all very little to with each other. I was not a speaker in the use of them. (Cheers) Perhaps, however, being a Morpheus selector, they would not be so as his appearing at Maidland to offer to be suffrage Mr. Bourne Russell. (Cheers) He was a very good speaker, that the happy hour was fast approaching. The feelings of the election would have passed away when, instead of political strife, they might regret their old friendly feeling, and sit down and smoke a calumet of peace together. (Cheers) In introduction to the candidates, I had no desire to say one word that could be considered as a slur on any of the candidates. He believed Mr. Russell to be a fit person to represent them, and one who, if he returned him, would do justice to their choice. (Cheers) He had been a useful man among the public readers for a number of years past, and this was the guarantee that he provided for them and to him as a candidate. At the same time, he admitted that the candidate against whom it was considered Mr. Russell was opposed was a man very considerable ability, and not without claims to this account to their superior talents. (C. W. Briggs to L. Nichols) It was needless for him to be so long. While career had provided him to be so good a person and so able a man, that he might scarcely rest on his merits, and he believed he spoke the opinion of a great portion of the community when he said it was a waste of time to doubt his ability to do service than any other man. He should not, therefore, linger, but simply move that Burne Russell Esq. is a fit and proper person to represent Northumberland Boroughs in the new Parliament.

Mr. K. still seconded the nomination and he stood up with much pleasure and with great respect to the meeting assembled, to second the nomination of Mr. Russell, and he should occupy the time as shortly as possible in the one or two other matters to make. He considered the only question for him to be asked was, whether there was any objection for Mr. Russell to be nominated. Mr. W. Weske and Mr. Russell. It was quite superfluous to mention Mr. Nichols' name on this occasion, as he was sure of his election, and accepting as a matter of law, the formalities of nominating him might well have been dispensed with altogether. (Cassius M. Jones, ibid.)

positive certainty of Mr. Nichols' election ought to exist among them. He believed it did exist, and therefore the formality of a nomination, so far as he was concerned, might have been dispensed with. To cause the consideration of the merits of the other candidates would have been to waste time. He had known one of these gentlemen for years, and he found him on all occasions a useful citizen, active and energetic in his efforts to support himself and to promote the welfare of the community with whom he was connected. He was a man who had had his ups and downs, but he was devoted, and he was a man who stood the best of trials. He had seen him emerge from never despairing, and it was his own energy all which had enabled him that day to claim the honor at the hands of the electors which he so richly merited from them. (Chester) Now they had in front of him this man, a good known man in the neighborhood, almost a stranger to him. This day he was, for no reason why he did think that the idea of electing Mr. Weeks to represent the Northumbria Boroughs should not have been entertained for a sin day. (Cheers.) He should, with these observations, cordially endorse the motion. (Cheers.)

Mr. WEEKESS then rose and was received with loud cheers. It was with much pleasure that he now appeared before them, to nominate another candidate—a gentleman whom he believed his conscience to be in every way worthy of their suffrage, and of whose merits he at least could present the greatest number of facts. He then proceeded to propose to them as a fit and proper person to represent them was Elias Carpenter Weekee, Esq. (Cheers.) It was quite true that, to a certain extent, Mr. Weekee was a stranger amongst them, but he could tell them that Mr. Weekee had always been a firm, steady, and consistent supporter of the rights of the colored people of the country. (Cheers.) When he was first called on by the electors of the boroughs to present them, he had come forward in a bold, straightforward style, and placed himself in their political path without any surrender whatever of his political principles. (Cheers.) Bringing Mr. Weekee forward, he was obliged to admit that he was not short of views of the antecedents of in gentleman's political career, and

TOWN OF PARRAMATTA.
THE LAST UNRESERVED SALE OF THE REMAINING PORTIONS OF THE OLD PARRAMATTA RACECOURSE. Friday

TWENTY-TWO SECTIONS, and subdivided into TWO HUNDRED and EVENTY-NINE ALLOTSMENTS, carefully laid out, meet the requirements of all railway and tramway lines, and are situated on the RAILWAY TERMINUS, commencing on the south side of BECKETT'S BRIDGE, an extending road to Parramatta, as far as Landsdown-street, the central position of the city, and near the entrance to the FIRST INLAND CITY OF AUSTRALIA, being the main line leading to the interior of the whole COLONY.

BOWDEN and THRILLED have been rewarded with instruction from the agent of W. H. B. & CO. to sell the above land, on MONDAY, the 21st April next, at 10 o'clock.

Valuable and extensive plot of land, so long and generally known as the Parramatta allotments, containing several acres of land, has been laid out in sections, and subdivided into allotments.

From the main road, so admirably suited for shops and, &c., four new streets are designed, taking a westerly direction along the whole course of the high road from the rear, affording frontages to a great many allotments, well suited for private residences, being so situate as to com-

The recent determination of the Government not to remove the terminus nearer to the old town than BECKETT'S BRIDGE, close to the property renders it certain that a new town, of modern design, and suitable to the wants of the present age of improvement, will be specifically erected on this spot, henceforward to be known and acknowledged as the real business part of Parnamatta. Already great improvements have been made on many of the allotments, and each succeeding day tends to increase the value of this rapidly rising property.

The lots are so numerous and varied in position as to suit the views of all classes of the community, so that the humblest individuals or the wealthy capitalist and speculator may both be supplied and fully satisfied.

M. R. A. DODD has received instructions from the proprietor to sell by auction, on the ground, Newcastle, on SATURDAY, March 29th, at 1 o'clock.

All that piece or parcel of land, situate in Newcastle parish of Newcastle, containing by admeasurement of 22 acres, being allotment No. 68 of section No.
2, subdivided into three parcels, to-wit:

No. 1, having 30 feet frontage to Bolton-street, by depth of 49 feet.

No. 2, a corner allotment, having 36 feet 6 inches to Bolton and 30 feet to King-street.

No. 3, commands a frontage of 49 feet 6 inches to Bolton by a depth of 49 feet.

The auctioneer is empowered in directing the attention of capitalists and others to this sale of eligible situated allotments in the city of Newcastle. From the above parcels of land, a building may be considered, building upon, quite equal to any.

Allotments in Newcastle are so exceedingly scarce, that the sale should be watched by those anxious to secure a valuable property. The parcels are situated close upon the railway between Maitland and Newcastle, and completed this will give an impetus to trade and already commenced, and as these now for sale will thus form an enormous price.

The title deeds are now lying at the office of the auctioneer for inspection by intending purchasers.
Terms at sale.
